

“We in the West must bear in mind that the poor countries are poor primarily because we have exploited them through political or economic colonialism. Americans in particular must help their nation repent of her modern economic imperialism.”

The Trumpet of Conscience (1968)
[New York: Harper]

“We may now be in only the initial period of an era of change as far-reaching in its consequences as the American Revolution. The developed industrial nations of the world cannot remain secure islands of prosperity in a seething sea of poverty.”

Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos or Community? (1967) [New York: Harper]
